

Work placement student feedback survey

It's important that both Registered Training Organisations (RTOs) and service providers monitor and evaluate work placements, so they continue to improve over time. Capturing structured post-placement feedback from students, service provider staff and training provider staff will help you understand what's working well and what could be improved.

It's best practice for student feedback to be shared openly between service providers and RTOs, and for parties to discuss and document opportunities for improvement and action to be taken. Service providers and RTOs should also seek feedback from their own work placement staff, to inform a debrief between the parties.

Below are some suggested questions to ask in a student survey at the end of a placement.

Student feedback survey questions

Your feedback is important to both your training provider and work placement employer because it helps improve work placements for future students and improve training overall.

All feedback is kept strictly confidential.

Please complete this survey form to the best of your ability by providing honest and constructive feedback.
